

Police Continue Investigating dentistry case

Police continue to attempt to unravel the mystery of how 17 people were kidnapped subjected to unwanted dental work and then abandoned on the street.

The NYPD has yet to make any arrests in the case and has not yet announced any suspects or leads.

Although information is still scarce about the case, a few things are known. Seventeen people were kidnapped, likely between three and five weeks ago. Their canines were capped, giving the illusions of fangs. In addition, some sort of mental conditioning was used on the victims to make them think they were monsters, according to an anonymous source at New York Methodist Hospital.

Over the past week, the victims each underwent several surgeries to restore their canines to normal. They remain under observation at New York Methodist and are undergoing therapy to counteract whatever mental abuse they did suffer.

Despite the reluctance of the NYPD to officially announce any suspects, they are working with area medical schools to investigate the possibility of student involvement.

Industrial sector reels under layoffs

Brooklyn Tool & Die announced plans yesterday to reduce headcount by 25 to 350 as part of a broader restructuring plan.

Brooklyn's shares went up 5% to $26.01 on this news.

This makes twelve local industrial suppliers to announce layoffs in the past two months.

The trend was started by Vontag two months ago when the notably eccentric firm announced plans to increase automation and decrease headcount.

Ronnel Wilson sentenced to Death for murder of 2 Detectives

Ronell Wilson was sentenced to death yesterday for the murder of two police detectives.

Mr. Wilson looked away in silence as a judge made official what a jury of seven men and five woman prescribed in January. "It is the judgment of the court," said Judge Nicholas G. Garaufis of Federal District Court in Brooklyn, "that the defendant Ronell Wilson is sentenced to death."

During that two-part trial, all interested parties had heard the details of Mr. Wilson's miserable upbringing at the Stapleton Houses project on Staten Island, of his bed-wetting, of his juvenile delinquency, of his street gang affiliation and of his plan to rob the two detectives.

And in January they heard the jurors prescribe this sentence of death, the first in a federal court in New York since the era of the Rosenbergs, executed for espionage in the 1950s.
